Composition: Modern Aesthetic in the Historic District

"When you open a door, you never know where it will lead you," says Jennifer Roberts, owner of Composition, Denver's only "design lifestyle" boutique.

Accordingly, the door to Composition, 1499 Blake Street, leads to a surprising, modern emporium. Craving shoes? Walk out in style. Floor covering? Create your own with colorful carpet tiles. Is writing your passion? Find journals, stationery and artful greeting cards. Travel? Composition sells guides galore. Travel with a laptop? Jennifer specializes in fashionable laptop totes. Jewelry, home accessories and lighting. The collection is ever-changing as Jennifer scours the world for offerings found nowhere else in Denver.

Composition's theme is quality modern design—and it works. Jennifer, a former civil engineer, succumbed to her passion for design and walked through Composition's door to a new life. She defines "success" as her ability to be a resource to those who share her modern aesthetic. So now customers ask her to locate unusual items, she hosts industrial design students, is currently designing the interior of an ad agency and volunteers for several non-profits, including LoDo District.

Walk through the door of Composition (say hi to Abby on the way in). You never know what you'll find.
