

FACES OF LODO

LEE GOODFRIEND DIXON'S

Whether you're a longtime LoDo resident or just arrived in town, chances are you've eaten at Dixons, located in the historic Henry Lee building at 16th and Wazee. It's now one of LoDo's "dining institutions," but when Dixons owner Lee Goodfriend opened the eatery in 1997, she was a trailblazer.

"It's become so much more vibrant! I love LoDo—the way it feels, the energy," Goodfriend says. "And now, it's becoming more of an 'urban' city. You're seeing empty nesters, young kids. People are actually starting to stay down here at night!"

Dixons has seen its own evolution over the years, not only providing a neighborhood gathering place, but also seeing quite a bit of business transacting across its tables. Stop by just about any morning of the week to catch a glimpse of business leaders, community figures, and the occasional politician enjoying a power meal.

But, Goodfriend says, the one thing that has remained the same is the quality – of service, food and atmosphere. As a locally owned and operated business, quality, she says, is their bread and butter. "I want people to know that we've put a lot of time into providing great products. We want you to come in and be comfortable and happy!"
