

FACES OF LODO

Kynton Chan Living Intentionally

I only recently moved to the Station at Riverfront Park on 15th and Little Raven Streets, but I have quickly noticed one characteristic that everyone here seems to share. No one here is busy just for the sake of being busy. And no one here is overly lazy. We tend to strike a delicate balance between productivity and leisure that can only be described as living intentionally.

And LoDo seems to suit our personalities perfectly. Monday through Thursday, LoDo has a distinct air of business. There is no shortage of suits and ties, power lunches and board meetings no matter where you turn. But come Friday morning, the ties are hard to come by, and the suits are off to the dry cleaners. By early Friday afternoon, you'll probably find some of LoDo's wealthiest and most influential people on a LoDo patio sipping cocktails in jeans and flip-flops.

LoDo-ites seem to work 10- to 12-hour days Monday through Thursday just so we can make it to Happy Hour by 3 on Friday afternoon. We attend networking events during the week instead of watching the latest episode of The Office so we can set the Out of Office reply a little early AND get a few runs in before the ski slopes close at 4 on Friday.

And living intentionally is an attitude that is embodied by the LoDo Young Professionals Committee. We are an enthusiastic group, full of fresh ideas and a desire to influence our community. But before we get down to business, we're going stop at the bar for a drink or two.

Living intentionally. It's a tough thing to do, but LoDo does it better than most.
